Eva Esch and her sisters are in a predicament. With the passing of their widowed mother, Eva’s older brother plans to move his growing family into the Eden Valley farmhouse where they all grew up, leaving little room for his three single sisters. Unless they marry within the year, the only apparent option is for two sisters to go to Indiana to live with an elderly great aunt. Eva hopes to be married, but she isn’t sure she wants to give up her sweet shop for the life of a farmer’s wife. And she can’t see how her prospects would be any better in Indiana.

When younger sister Lily disappears in the night, leaving only a brief note, Eva fears she has been wooed away from the People by an outsider. And when Jed Stutzman, a young Amish buggy maker from Ohio, shows up at Eva’s market stand in Lancaster with a photo of a Plain young woman, Eva’s world begins to tilt. She feels powerfully drawn to the quietly charming stranger—but the woman in the forbidden photograph is no stranger at all. . . .

EXCERPT

Miranda wrenched the door open and strode into the hall. Her stride was firm. Her posture perfect. Nothing would make her abandon the endless lessons she'd received in ladylike etiquette from her mother.

Then she walked into a wall.

Oh, very well, it wasn't a wall precisely. Walls weren't covered in wool. They were not positioned in the middle of hallways.

"I do apologize, my lady."

And they did not speak.

Miranda looked up at the obstruction that was not a wall, but a solidly built man with broad shoulders and dark hair. She fell back a step, until her shoulders pressed against the solidity of the actual wall. Up and up her gaze traveled.

With a deep breath she reminded herself who she was. A lady of the realm. The daughter of a duke. Somewhere inside her must lay the aristocratic arrogance she'd seen so many society ladies embody.

"Pardon me." Miranda almost clapped with glee at the clipped, snobby tone that indicated she wasn't begging anyone's pardon. "Who are you?"

The slam of a door down the hall caused both of them to swivel their heads in that direction. Miranda's brother, Griffith, hustled down the hall from the direction of the master's chambers. "There you are, Marcus." Griffith's arm curled around her shoulders as he gestured to the human blockade. "Miranda, this is my new valet."

She turned to properly greet the new servant. He leaned forward, nodding his head to acknowledge her. A small smile tugged at the corner of his lips and he didn't drop his gaze.

Air backed up into her lungs as she looked into his startling gray eyes. She had always considered gray a rather flat and lifeless color before. Mysterious and vibrant would be a more apt description when it came to this man's eyes. A world of secrets swirled in their depths.

Sparkling Regency Romance from a Captivating New Voice

- Regency romance is a beloved and ever-popular category for historical romance readers
- The glittering world of early nineteenth-century London's aristocratic society comes to life in this lively new entrée in the historical romance category
- Hunter will appeal to readers of all historical romance and especially to Regency lovers as she is an avid and well-informed fan of Regency romance and coordinator of a Regency fiction blog

Lady Miranda Hawthorne acts every inch the lady, but inside she longs to be bold and carefree. Entering her fourth Season and approaching spinsterhood in the eyes of society, she pours her innermost feelings out not in a diary but in letters to her brother's old school friend, a duke—with no intention of ever sending these private thoughts to a man she's heard stories about but never met. Meanwhile, she also finds herself intrigued by Marcus, her brother's new valet, and although she may wish to break free of the strictures that bind her, falling in love with a servant is more of a rebellion than she planned.

When Marcus accidentally discovers and mails one of the letters to her unwitting confidant, Miranda is beyond mortified. And even more shocked when the duke returns her note with one of his own that initiates a courtship-by-mail. Insecurity about her lack of suitors shifts into confusion at her growing feelings for two men—one she's never met but whose words deeply resonate with her heart, and one she has come to depend on but whose behavior is more and more suspicious. When it becomes apparent state secrets are at risk and Marcus is right in the thick of the conflict, one thing is certain: Miranda's heart is far from all that's at risk for the Hawthornes and those they love.

EXCERPT

I had just slipped a plain tunic over my head when we heard a pounding at the courtyard gate. Elisheba's wide eyes met mine, then she hurried to the front door and opened it, reflexively ducking when she saw the tall guard standing outside the house. "The king summons you," he said. "Do not delay, but come at once."

"The king?" My heart filled with fear as I turned to Elisheba. "Do you think something has happened to—"

"At once!" the guard repeated.

While Elisheba stared in disbelief, with trembling fingers I lifted a cloak from a wall hook and threw it over my shoulders.

When I reached the doorway, the guard gripped my arm with surprising force and we walked across the large paved courtyard, past a building with several doors, and finally through a long passageway and up a narrow flight of stairs.

A colorful canopy had been erected against a wall to provide shade from the slanting sun. Potted plants stood around the periphery as a sort of screen, I supposed, to offer a measure of privacy from the servants and guards. . . .

I walked past the line of potted palms and caught my breath when I recognized the red-bearded man seated on a couch. I had seen King David only from a distance, and from that perspective he had always seemed regal, strong, and impressive. Now, softened by twilight, he looked far less royal . . . until he lifted his gaze and I realized where I was.

"Oh king, live forever." I collapsed on the floor as my quivering knees gave way. "If I have found mercy in your sight, please tell me what news you have of Uriah the Hittite."

Keeping my gaze downcast, I heard him utter two words to the guard. "Leave us."

EXCERPT

Justin loosed a sigh nearly lost under the purr of the motorcar's engine. "The story she told seems to be true—she was in York with the opera at the time but did not have a child of her own."

Had Brook been anywhere else, she would have let her eyes slide closed so she could summon the image of beautiful Maman, try to conjure the sound of her sterling soprano. But the memory had faded over the years, until it was little more than a crystal echo.

"So Prince Louis was right to keep me always at a distance—I am not his daughter." At least she wasn't another cause for scandal in the Grimaldi line. But it meant Maman was not her mother. And Grand-père . . . he hadn't wanted her to ask these questions. She was, he had said, the only member of his family who acted like family, and what would he have if she left?

But she couldn't live her life as a pretender.

Brook pressed on the accelerator. "What am I, then? A farmer's daughter? An abandoned waif?" She glanced Justin's way, brows arched.

"Eyes on the road!"

Hopefully he saw only that she turned her face to the windshield and not that she rolled her eyes in the process. "Was I right about the envelope? The seal?" Maman had left her with boxes upon boxes of correspondence, faded letters from faded loves. But one box had been different—the letters were in English, but that made them only rare, not unique. The tone was different too, though, not at all what amorous patrons had usually sent to Collette. And more, Brook had seen her own name on the ones on the top of the stack. Give Little Liz a kiss from her papa. But it had been signed only with Yours Forever, and the one envelope with the seal upon it had no address.

Brook had to resist the urge to touch her necklace, the necklace Maman had confessed with her last breath had belonged to that unknown she, Brook's true mother. The woman killed in the carriage accident from which Collette had rescued Brook. Perhaps the my love those English letters had been written to.

"The envelope was helpful. Brook . . ." Justin sighed again and rested a hand on her shoulder. "I found your mother. I saw a portrait of her, and it might as well have been you in a bustle. We found her. We found you."

Roseanna White Debuts Sparkling British Historical Romance

- An enthralling new Edwardian series perfect for fans of Downton Abbey and all things British

- “This installment’s intricate plot, terrific twists, and heart-stopping intrigue, as well as the heroine’s deeply moving journey of faith, grace, and redemption, create a memorable book to be devoured and cherished.” —Romantic Times on Circle of Spies, 4½ stars and a Top Pick

Brook Eden has never known where she truly belongs. Though raised in the palace of Monaco, she’s British by birth and was brought to the Grimaldis under suspicious circumstances as a babe. When Brook’s friend Justin uncovers the fact that Brook is likely a missing heiress from Yorkshire, Brook leaves the sun of the Mediterranean to travel to the moors of the North Sea to the estate of her supposed family.

The mystery of her mother’s death haunts her, and though her father is quick to accept her, the rest of the family and the servants of Whitby Park are not. Only when Brook’s life is threatened do they draw close—but their loyalty may come too late to save Brook from the same threat that led to tragedy for her mother.

As heir to a dukedom, Justin is no stranger to balancing responsibilities. When the matters of his estate force him far from Brook, the distance between them reveals that what began as friendship has grown into something much more. But how can their very different loyalties and responsibilities ever come together?

And then, for a second time, the heiress of Whitby Park is stolen away because of the very rare treasure in her possession—and this time only the servants of Whitby can save her.

AUTHOR'S NOTE

My readers have been asking me to write more biblical fiction for quite a while now, so this three-book series was for them. I have always been fascinated with the biblical time period of Ezra and Nehemiah, and I wanted to capture the incredible faith and determination of these men and their families as they returned to God and to their land. I see so many parallels to our contemporary time period as we struggle to walk with God and avoid the temptation to adapt to our culture.

As I wrote this series, I journeyed with the exiles from Babylon to Jerusalem in Return to Me as they rediscovered their faith. I watched them overcome opposition and obstacles to rebuild God's temple in Jerusalem and heard the words of the biblical prophets Zechariah and Haggai in a new light. In Keepers of the Covenant, I was inspired by Ezra's commitment to not only read and study God's word but to live by it. And now, in On This Foundation, I've learned so much from Nehemiah and his determined commitment to follow God's call on his life and accomplish His work.

So, thank you to all my readers who asked me to return to biblical fiction. I hope you'll be as inspired and encouraged in reading THE RESTORATION CHRONICLES as I was in writing them.

The Powerful Concluding Novel to THE RESTORATION CHRONICLES

- A perennial bestseller with a global reach, Austin has fans across the country and the world
- Her novels continue to set the standard for historical and biblical fiction
- This rousing conclusion to her RESTORATION CHRONICLES gives readers a vivid look into Old Testament life

When news that the wall of Jerusalem is broken down, and its gates have been burned with fire, Nehemiah, Jewish cupbearer to King Artaxerxes in Persia, seeks God's guidance. After fasting and prayer, he's given leave to travel to Jerusalem and rebuild the city wall, not anticipating all the dangers that await him on his arrival.

The leaders of the surrounding nations become his fierce enemies, plotting to assassinate him and halt the work. A drought, meanwhile, has left the country impoverished, many families resorting to selling their children as bondservants just to keep from starving.

Capturing the rebuilding of the wall through the eyes of a number of characters, On This Foundation is a powerful exploration of faith in the midst of oppression, and hope that, in spite of appearances, the gracious hand of God is upon those who believe.

Romantic Suspense to Keep Readers Guessing Until the Last Page

- Mehl returns to the town of Sanctuary for her third book in this exciting series
- Romantic suspense with skillfully-executed mystery, an engaging cast of characters, and a town that takes on a life of its own
- “Unexpected twists and suspense . . . will keep the reader guessing even as the plot takes several surprising turns . . . ultimately demonstrating the impact of forgiveness and the promise of hope.” —CBA Retailers + Resources

Sophie Wittenbauer left her strict Mennonite hometown under a cloud of shame and regret. After a rough childhood, her teenage poor choices harmed others, leaving her with no choice but to change her life. Her entry-level writing job at a newspaper puts her in the right place at the right time to overhear office gossip about a prisoner who has information on a decades-old unsolved crime. While the other reporters write off the tip as the ravings of an angry criminal, Sophie can't ignore it because she knows the name of this prisoner from her old life.

Upon learning from the man that one of the other suspects is hiding out in the Missouri town of Sanctuary, she takes on a false identity to investigate and meets the young pastor of a local church—the very man she'd loved as a troubled teenager. As she gets closer to finding the suspect, will the truth of her own past come out before she discovers the identity of the criminal—or the very person she's seeking puts a fatal stop to her investigation?

Sophie Dupont, daughter of a portrait painter, assists her father in his studio, keeping her own artwork out of sight. She often walks the cliffside path along the north Devon coast, popular with artists and poets. It's where she met the handsome Wesley Overtree, the first man to tell her she's beautiful.

Captain Stephen Overtree is accustomed to taking on his brother's neglected duties. Home on leave, he's sent to find Wesley. Knowing his brother rented a cottage from a fellow painter, he travels to Devonshire and meets Miss Dupont, the painter's daughter. He's startled to recognize her from a miniature portrait he carries with him—one of Wesley's discarded works. But his happiness plummets when he realizes Wesley has left her with child and sailed away to Italy in search of a new muse.

Wanting to do something worthwhile with his life, Stephen proposes to Sophie. He does not offer love, or even a future together, but he can save her from scandal. If he dies in battle, as he believes he will, she'll be a respectable widow with the protection of his family.

Desperate for a way to escape her predicament, Sophie agrees to marry a stranger and travel to his family's estate. But at Overtree Hall, her problems are just beginning. Will she regret marrying Captain Overtree when a repentant Wesley returns? Or will she find herself torn between the father of her child and her growing affection for the husband she barely knows?
