A mysterious letter alluding to a secret in her parents’ past brings Genevieve Woodward back to her Blue Ridge Mountains hometown, but she’s also in need of a break from a high-profile career that has left her dangerously burned out and concealing a powerful secret of her own. When she wakes inside an unfamiliar cottage to find the confused owner staring down at her, she can no longer ignore the fact that she needs help.

Sam Turner has embraced his sorrow and his identity as an outsider. The solitary, disciplined life he lives on his historic farm is the life he’s chosen for himself. The last thing he wants is to rent his cottage to a woman as troubled as she is talkative. Yet, he can’t force himself to turn her away right when she needs him most.

As Genevieve researches her family’s history and her and Sam’s emotions deepen, they will have to let go of the façades and loneliness they’ve clung to and allow light to illuminate every hidden truth.

EXCERPT

The lawyer continued, "If your daughter has a legal claim to the estate, that would also render her responsible in the eyes of the court—your daughter and the other heir."

"Other heir?" Her adoptive father shook his head.

"The sister—Grace Bennett."

Lillian gasped audibly. Grace? Oh sweet little Gracie. No, she had died too.

Father's voice softened. "Forgive me, but you're misinformed, Mr. Dorn. Lillian had a younger sister, but she died from tuberculosis."

The man's head tilted in surprise. "No, I don't believe that's correct." More shuffling through papers.

Lillian held her breath. What was he saying? No, that was settled long ago.

Mr. Dorn held out a new paper, then pushed it across toward Lillian, explaining solemnly, "We have a record from the hospital where your parents were treated. They suspected Grace Bennett contracted tuberculosis, but there was never a death report. Which led me to check with various sanitariums where she might have been treated instead. And I found one where Miss Bennett was, in fact, registered."

Lillian's words were scarcely audible. "Gracie? My sister? She was so small at the time."

Setting his pen on the table, he paused for Lillian to recover from the shock before proceeding gently. "I'm so afraid we haven't found her though. I'm so sorry. All I can tell you is that she didn't die alongside your parents. She went to a sanitarium, but we don't know where she went afterward."

As a young girl, Lillian Walsh lost both her parents and a younger sister. Now in her twenties, after enduring the death of her adoptive mother, Lillian must find her place in the world. Just as her adoptive father is leaving for an extended trip to his native Wales, a lawyer appears at the door to inform Lillian that she has inherited a small estate from her birth parents—and that the sister she had long believed dead is likely alive.

When she discovers that her sister, Grace, is living in a city not far away, Lillian rushes to a reunion, fearful that the years of separation will make it hard to reconnect.

When the two sisters meet, Grace is not at all what Lillian expected to find. Though her circumstances have been difficult, Grace has big dreams. Can Lillian set aside her own plans to join her sister in an adventure that will surely change them both?

EXCERPT

"Let's make a deal," Lucius said in a low voice. Too low for her mother to hear. "I won't say another word about you going to my sister's if you are awarded the scholarship. You can continue living here and attend school."

Nora narrowed her eyes. "But if I don't get it, you want me to go to Long Island, is that it?"

"Without complaint."

Nora looked around Lucius at her mother, who watched them with fearful eyes, then back at her stepfather. Her heart thumped against her chest. Could she put it all on the line? "Okay. On one condition. When I graduate with my master's, you turn the journal over to me."

He gave a brittle laugh. "Why would I do that?"

"Because I love it, and you don't."

Lucius studied her, his dark eyes partially hidden beneath heavy lids. Nora clutched her hands into fists around her sketch pad. "I'll think about it," he said.

"I want your answer before graduation." Nora stepped away from the window. "No more talk about me going to Long Island, and the journal will be mine once I receive my master's."

"If you get the scholarship, Nora. If you graduate with a master's." The look in his eyes told her he didn't think she would. "And if I agree to your terms."

Exciting Historical Romance Debut with an Exotic Setting

- This stand-alone historical romance will appeal to fans of Elizabeth Camden and novels with bold, clever heroines
- Much of the story is set in India, where the author spent time as a missionary
- This promising new author is well connected among CBA fiction writers and is poised to launch a strong career

It's 1885, and all Nora Shipley wants, now that she's graduating from Cornell University as valedictorian of the entomology program, is to follow in her late father's footsteps by getting her master's degree and taking over the scientific journal he started. The only way to uphold her father's legacy is to win a scholarship, so she joins a research expedition in Kodaikanal, India, to prove herself in the field.

India isn't what she expects, though, and neither is the rival classmate who accompanies her, Owen Epps. As her preconceptions of India—and of Owen—fall away, she finds both far more captivating than she expected. Forced by the expedition leader to stay at camp and illustrate exotic butterflies the men of the team find without her, Nora befriends Sita, a young Indian girl who has been dedicated to a goddess against her will.

In this spellbinding new land, Nora is soon faced with impossible choices—between saving Sita and saving her career, and between what she's always thought she wanted and the man she's come to love.

When an accident claims the life of an oil-rig worker on the first drilling platform off the North Carolina coast, Coast Guard investigators Rissi Dawson and Mason Rogers are sent to take the case. Tensions surrounding the oil rig are high and the death has everyone on edge. Environmental activists are threatening to do whatever it takes to stop the structure from being completed, while rumors are being whispered about ancient curses surrounding this part of the ocean.

Mounting evidence shows the death may not have been an accident at all. Was he killed by one of the activists or, perhaps more frighteningly, a member of his own crew? Rissi and Mason have to sort through not only a plethora of suspects, but also their own past and attraction to each other.

Just as the case seems like it'll break open, worse news arrives. A tropical storm has turned their way and soon they're cut off from any rescue—and right where the killer wants them. It's a race to discover his identity before he eliminates the threat they pose.

EXCERPT

I'm flirting with a man outside of a pastor's office, and so blatantly that a teenage boy felt the need to excuse himself. This is a new measure of low, even for me.

There's a glimmer in Cameron's eyes that I don't miss this time. Probably because I know it's very likely plastered all over my face, too. The attraction is mutual but needs to stay stuffed down and buried under the huge oak tree in my aunt's backyard.

Getting involved with anyone while in my current state of vulnerability is a bad idea. Getting involved with a guy who spends his time singing about a God who I doubt exists, well, that's just reckless. And my days of leaping into the unknown are over.

Brand-New Contemporary Romance Series from an Award-Winning Author

- Gray's 2017 RITA Award win shows her novels have broad appeal across both CBA and mainstream markets
- Relevant characters and romance, an expert blend of wit and emotion, and a fresh voice make this a sure win in a growth category in fiction
- "Tammy L. Gray is a must-read author for me. Powerful storytelling and exquisite characterization mark her stories."—Rel Mollet, host of Relz Reviewz and INSPY Awards advisory board member

January Sanders grew up believing karma was more reliable than an imaginary higher power, but after suffering her worst heartbreak in 29 years, she's open to just about anything, including taking a temporary position at her aunt's church. Keeping her lack of faith a secret, January is determined to use her photographic memory to help Grace Community's overworked staff, all while scraping herself off rock bottom.

What she doesn't count on is meeting the church's handsome and charming guitarist, who not only is a strong believer, but has also dedicated his life to Christian music. It's a match set for disaster, and yet January has no ability to stay away, even if it means pretending to have faith in a God she doesn't believe in.

Only this time, keeping secrets isn't as easy as she thought it would be. Especially when she's constantly running into her aunt's landscape architect, who seems to know everything about her past and present sins and makes no apologies about pushing her to deal with feelings she'd rather keep buried.

Torn between two worlds incapable of coexisting, can January find the healing that's eluded her or will her resistance to the truth ruin any chance of happiness?

But then his mother threatens to stop funding his carefree life—unless he comes home for Christmas. Out of options, he sets out for Ivy Hill, planning to be back on a coach bound for London and his unencumbered bachelor life as soon as the festivities are over.

But Christmas in the country presents unforeseen surprises, including encounters with an orphaned apprentice, the first love he disappointed years ago, and Arabella Awdry, a young lady who is far more appealing than he recalled . . . and determined to have nothing to do with him.

EXCERPT

Maddie took out a blank note pad, a periwinkle blue Flair pen, applied fresh lipstick, straightened her skirt, said a little prayer, and waited for her clients to arrive.

Outside the open casement window, she heard a commotion of excited shouts and footsteps pound down the street. Curious, she left her office and went to the street to see what was causing the fuss. She stood at the top of Main Street and shielded her eyes from the bright morning sun. Behind her came the tap-tap of Tillie's high heels and then the sound stopped abruptly as she stood right beside Maddie. "Oh my word," she said. "He said he was going to parachute in today, but I didn't think he meant literally."

There, floating down from the sky, right in front of Boon Dock, was a brightly colored parachute with a man dangling underneath. "Tillie, is that our new pastor?"

"Indeed it is."

"What's his name again?"

"Richard O'Shea."

"That's right." Wait. Hold it. Oh no. She jerked her head down. "Not . . . no, it couldn't be . . ." Her heart started to pound. "Does he happen to go by the name of Ricky?"

"No."

Maddie blew out a puff of air. Phew. It couldn't be the same guy. No way. It couldn't possibly be the same Ricky with whom she grew up. A million in one odds. Not a chance.

"Rick, he calls himself."

A queasy roll started up in Maddie's stomach. No, no, no, no, no. How could this world be so big and yet so small?

Fisher's Books Have Sold More Than 1.1 Million Copies

- Fisher's books appear consistently on CBA and ECPA bestseller lists
- If you had a chance to fix things with your first love, would you do it?

For Madison Grayson, life is good. Newly licensed as a marriage and family therapist, she can't wait to start her practice. Despite the unfortunate shortage of eligible bachelors on the island—they're all too young, too old, or too weird—Maddie feels like she's finally found her sweet spot. Not even one panic attack in the last year. Not one.

And then Ricky O'Shea drops in. Literally. Floating down from the pure blue sky, the one man in the world she hoped never to see again—the one who'd been her archnemesis from kindergarten through her senior dance—parachutes into town, landing on Boon Dock, canopy draping behind him like a superhero. Ricky O'Shea. Now Pastor Rick, the new minister on Three Sisters Island.

Time to panic.

With wit and a bit of whimsy, bestselling author Suzanne Woods Fisher invites you back to Three Sisters Island where family, forgiveness, and a second chance at love await.

As these polar-opposite celeb chefs begin to peel away the layers of public persona and reputation, they will not only discover the key ingredients for getting along, but also learn the secret recipe for unexpected forgiveness . . . and maybe even love. In the meantime, hide the knives.

Aria has dedicated her life to helping children born with defective hearts. After all, she was one of those children. Now driven to succeed, she lives a lonely, stressful life. One she would have lost on Denali if it hadn't been for Jake. Jake is exciting and handsome, but he's also dangerous, and she's already lost one person she loves. She can't bear it again.

It's not until she finds herself trapped in the middle of a category 4 hurricane that she can admit she needs Jake desperately. With their very survival in the balance, can they hope for a second chance at life . . . and love?

Before Dan opened his door to find a wounded woman who had escaped from the tormentors in the mountain, his life had become rather quiet. He and the eight other people in the mostly abandoned town had become friends. They spent peaceful evenings around the campfire and even made vague plans to journey east one day and leave the ominous mountain behind.

But the woman’s arrival changes everything.

Who is she? How does she know so much about Dan’s brother, who is still held captive in the mountain? Why are long-forgotten memories rising to the surface? And why does Dan feel so compelled to keep her presence in his house a secret?

Visionary writer Shawn Smucker is back with an unsettling story that invites us to consider two challenging questions: To what lengths will we go to assuage our own guilt? and Is there a limit to the things we will do for the people we love?

EXCERPT

Former Army Ranger and Special Ops soldier turned private contractor, Gavin Black, monitored the situation. From his position just outside the compound, protected only by a hill of sand, he could hear the faint hum of the plane's engine fifteen thousand feet above him. "It's a go," Gavin said into the headset. "Once you're down, wait for my signal." He'd gone ahead, on the ground and at great risk to himself, to make sure the others could breach the compound in a way that would catch the occupants off guard—and give him and his team the advantage. Mere seconds would make the difference between life and death.

When the Lieutenant General had called Gavin and requested his services, he hadn't been able to refuse—and not just because of the man's rank.

"My daughter's been kidnapped," he'd said, "taken by the Taliban from a school where she was a guest instructor. She, another teacher, and twelve female students are being held at a compound in the middle of the Registan Desert. The only way in without detection is to drop in at night."

Registan Desert? There was more than one compound in that suffocating place. "Which compound, sir?"

"Hibatullah Omar's. And they're saying he's behind the kidnapping."

Gavin had stilled. Of course it would be his. "That's not possible. Omar's dead."

The Revell Story

Offering Hope and Help to Readers for 150 Years

excerpts from the retrospective penned by Ann Byle

The Revell Story • $9.99 • 978-0-8007-3801-3

Fleming Hewitt Revell was just 21 years old when he stepped into the publishing business by starting Fleming H. Revell Publishing in 1870. Born in 1849 in Chicago, Illinois, the move into publishing wasn't a huge stretch for the young man.

The year before, in 1869, he'd taken over printing his famous brother-in-law's Everybody's Paper, intended for use in the many Sunday schools around the country. Dwight Lyman Moody, by then a well-known evangelist, had married Revell's sister Emma in 1862. Moody was eager to reach as many as possible with God's Word and knew just the man to help him.

Revell set up offices in the Arcade Court Building on Chicago's Madison Avenue, then known as Bookseller's Row, at a time when business was booming in the 33-year-old city. The meat industry was going strong, rail lines crisscrossed the city, and steel mills flourished. Industry was fed by the thousands of refugees from the post-Civil War South and immigrants from around the world. These were the days of Armour, Swift, McCormick, and Marshall Field.

Tragedy struck hard on October 8, 1871. The Great Chicago Fire—its origins are officially unknown but legend has it that Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicked over a lantern in her barn—destroyed more than 17,000 structures including the Arcade Court Building. Revell's business was in ashes.

Not even two years old, Revell Publishing faced a turning point, but Fleming Revell wasn't to be beaten. He decided to begin publishing books along with Moody's Sunday school papers, a decision that continues to reverberate 150 years later. . . .

D.L. Moody had long thought that more people would read quality Christian books if they were less costly. Toward that end, he and Revell collaborated on the Colportage Library series of mass market paperbacks that retailed for 10 to 20 cents each. Colporteurs—those who peddled books, newspapers and other materials—sold the books door-to-door across the country and in England to an eager public. In the early years, some sellers rode horseback to peddle their wares. . . .

In the prosperous years before and after the turn of the century, Revell moved into publishing more general market titles such as The Bondage of Ballenger by Roswell Field, as well as contemplated an even bigger move.

Revell had long had an office in New York City, considered to be the center of American publishing. It was managed by S. Edgar Briggs and maintained its own editorial, business, and production departments.

Revell's vice president George H. Doran advocated both the move into the general market and consolidating offices. Fleming Revell resisted such efforts at first, but he liked the idea of operating more economically and he wanted to live in New York anyway. Soon the move was made, with the publishing company taking up residence at 158 Fifth Avenue, the Presbyterian Building, from 1905 to 1950. . . .

The 1940s were tumultuous as World War II raged, even as Revell continued its ascent as a publisher of Christian books. . . .

One of the biggest surprises of that era was the success of Mr. Jones, Meet the Master. Catherine Marshall had compiled sermons her husband, the late Rev. Peter Marshall, had preached at New York Presbyterian Church in Washington DC and prayers he'd offered as Senate chaplain, with Revell publishing the book in 1949.

This book of sermons written in language the common reader understood took off, selling well in religious and general market bookstores. The Revell staff asked themselves why.

"We asked ourselves, 'Why did this happen—and how can we make it happen again?'" William Barbour said. Before 1949, Revell "served primarily ministers, Sunday school teachers and active church laymen." As the success of Mr. Jones mounted, Revell "started keying in on the layman more than on the religious worker . . . In trying to meet the rising interest of the layperson in spiritual matters, we found that other laypeople could possibly reach them more effectively."

Revell's interest in trade books was born. Instead of publishing only theological books for pastors, professors, and church leaders, Revell began targeting the people sitting in the pews every Sunday. . . .

Revell Publishing has kept its focus on readers through 150 years of publishing. Beginning with Sunday school papers at the request of Fleming Revell's famous brother-in-law, moving into theological titles and sermon compilations, and on to trade titles and fiction, Revell has always turned its heart to the readers.

What do readers want? What do readers need? Who speaks best to those readers? These are questions asked daily at Revell.

"The more we think about what the reader is looking for, the better the bottom line," said Jennifer Leep, EVP of Trade Publishing.

Personal growth and practical help continue to be the hallmark of the house. "We focus much of our publishing on practical hope and help—ideas and concepts readers can carry with them throughout their day," says editorial director Andrea Doering. . . .

"Revell is part of the heart of Baker Publishing Group," said president Dwight Baker. "We were honored to purchase it and are honored to help in its success. My father, Richard Baker, was smart to buy it; my grandfather, Herman Baker, would have loved to be part of it. I pray that we can continue to help uphold the long legacy of Revell." ■
